Ask what they would want in a new “daylighted” Saw Mill River park when the project began several years ago, Yonkers community residents said one thing would be family activities surrounding art and science; another was to involve the youth of the city in teaching about the environment.

Well, Groundwork Hudson Valley has announced that the community will get its wish with an eight-week series of free activities in the park.

The series kicks off Saturday, July 13 with art workshops at the water’s edge for children of all ages led by Yonkers artists, and on July 20, park tours and science activities will be added to the program. The tours and activities will be led by local youth docents highlighting the engineering feat behind the daylighting, the history of the site, and the environmental story of the estuary.

Groundwork Hudson Valley, in partnership with Blue Door Artist Association, received funding for these activities under an agreement awarded by the Environmental Protection Agency with an eight-week series of free activities in the park.

The concert series kicked off July 5 and proved to be a hot spot in the Yonkers downtown area.

Andrea and James are the winners of the 1997 President’s Award for Excellence in songwriting by the Songwriters Guild of America/New York. (Despite the heat) we had a great start last Friday with close to 200 people out to enjoy New York City kindergarten through 12th-grade students, which culminated as CD projects. Sowers Celebrate Summer Aboard the Science Barge

The Science Barge at Yonkers waterfront was a party scene June 21, as Groundwork Hudson Valley hosted The Sowers Ball. Gathering for a post-planting celebration with a Texas twist, more than 50 people came together to enjoy a glorious summer solstice existing on the Hudson.

It was an opportunity for folks from across a wide spectrum of Groundwork’s farming and food programs, collectively called “Get Fresh Yonkers,” to gather, mingle and talk about their endeavors. Ranging in age from 5 to 83, the group included people taking part in several Groundwork initiatives. The “Environmental Food Team” is made up of older adults who attended weekly food workshops and field trips, and “Citizen Farmers” includes residents tending various crops in small plots throughout Yonkers and sharing their produce with one another in a co-operative. Community-supported Agriculture members include share-holders who get a mix of farm-fresh, organic produce each week, and the “Farmers Market Farm Team” consists of Yonkers high school students working summer jobs at the Get Fresh Yonkers Farmers Market each week in Van der Donck Park.

The Get Fresh Yonkers initiative, funded by a two-year grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is a comprehensive plan to provide greater access to affordable, fresh produce and to create food-related job opportunities and vocational training for youth. It labors with area farms, local schools and downtown businesses; this co-op approach includes the formation of the Citizen Farmers initiative, which provides Yonkers residents with the space and skills to grow vegetables for the farmers market, as well as to share with each other and other members of Groundwork’s community-supported agriculture program.

Another key component of Get Fresh Yonkers is the newly expanded farmers market, open every Saturday through Oct. 26, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and now located in Van der Donck Park opposite the Yonkers Train Station. “This isn’t simply your run-of-the-mill farmers market,” said Curt Collier, deputy director of Groundwork Hudson Valley. “By uniting the community with local farms and training our youth to run the market, our goal is to create deeper connections between local residents and fresh-picked foods that can last into the future.”

The farmers market features free lectures, tastings with seasonal produce, and entertain- ment each week for all ages.

The only challenge in the Republican Party this election cycle in Yonkers will be for City Council president. The Republican nominee for council president Liam McLaughlin has more than enough signatures to get on the ballot. McLaughlin's possible challenger Grace Borrani will also submit her Republican petitions before the deadline. Borrani's petitions will certainly be reviewed by Republican supporters of McLaughlin. Borrani also has the Conservative Party endorsement for council president, but McLaughlin will attempt to ballot against Borrani and force a Conservative Primary.

Incumbent City Councilmembers John Larkin in the 6th District and Dennis Shepherd in the 4th District submitted enough petitions to secure their ballot space this November.
